Comment(s) or question(s)	Have not been able to find any robust analysis suggesting using credit scores is not an accurate way of setting rates. The only reason it would make sense not use use them is if Commissioner Brine has data showing people with high credit scores do not have a lower claim or accident rate. Hope this is not another rule being based on anecdotes or feelings of "fairness", which can mean anything to anybody. The price increases hitting seniors are large and especially damaging during this period of inflation.
